This year, the Smart City Panel will kick off a debate on two big issues that are rapidly changing our everyday lives. It's about technology and the job market. There are many unanswered questions. How does technology affect our well-being? Are we using technology to deliver efficient and effective outcomes? How does technology intertwine with business and the labour market? On the other hand, we will discuss the potentials of the IQ network and how innovative urban ecosystems can use technology to leapfrog stages of urban development.

16.15 – 17:45 PANEL 2. Unger Family Foundation Panel: *The World After Covid* (Passcode 2021) - ROOM A*

The Unger Family foundation has been working in Croatia since the mid-1990s, helping to support and foster economic and community development through independent research and civic education and engagement. The foundation has worked closely with USAID, the Harvard Kennedy School, Cleveland State University, and the University of Rijeka to engage Croatian political leaders and civil servants and improve the quality and professionalization and governance. More recently, the foundation has also supported the efforts of individual scholars who are conducting research in various related fields. The panel will give a group of these scholars a chance to share their experiences working with the foundation and to present some of their current research related to issues of governance, economic development, and smart cities.

The ongoing global Covid19 pandemic has deeply affected all aspects of political, economic, and social life. Online work and distance learning are changing way humans work and interact with one another and blurring geographical boundaries. Contact tracing and digital applications that monitor or geographic location have tremendous economic and health benefits, but also bring up a slew of privacy and security issues for individual. The pandemic has disrupted global production chains and forced national leaders to reconsider moving production of essential equipment and medicines back to their home countries. Populist politicians use Covid to stoke political divides and maintain their grip on power. Meanwhile, the pandemic is having a profound effect on international relations and has significant implications for the power transition currently under way between the US and China. The panel will give a diverse group of scholars a chance to share their research on these and other issues, so that we may develop a better understanding of what a post-Covid world will look like.
